NEWSWEEK HAS RANKED ALBRIGHT AMONG ITS TOP 25 COLLEGES FOR ARTISTIC STUDENTS.
ART EDUCATION

As an incoming art education student, you can submit along with your Admission application a portfolio of artwork that could qualify you for a talent award. As a student in the program, you’ll interact with the community by offering art lessons in area public schools, Albright’s acclaimed Freedman Gallery and the Reading Public Museum. As a graduate, you will leave the College with a superior teaching portfolio that reflects your unique undergraduate teaching experiences as well as the quality of your artwork.

HEED THE VOICES

A STUDY IN ART | With works of art blanketing the campus, Albright students are never at a loss for inspiration. As art education major Michael Barreto ’16 observes, even the facility in which he studies reflects the College’s creative bent. “The Center for the Arts building is itself art,” he says. “The award-winning architectural design encourages you to become fully immersed and feel as though art is always around you. In order to be successful, you must be able to feel at home, as you can here.”

TEACHING BY DOING | Before she began student teaching, art education major Adrienne Lastoskie ’07 team-taught in local public schools as well as at the Reading Public Museum, experiences she cites as helping her land a job teaching art in suburban Maryland. The benefits didn’t stop with the job offer. Adrienne says the rigor of her studio art classwork have contributed to her teaching. “The challenging studio art courses at Albright enabled me to develop my artistic skills and create a strong teaching portfolio,” she says. “Now I translate studio assignments I had in college to assignments I can give to my students.”
