1. Periodical Abstracts
   A database for all kinds of information and is much like InfoTrack but is more extensive and has many articles in full text. It is especially good for sources from general magazines. You can access it by going to one of the terminals at the library or via the internet by typing in:
   http://rave.ohiolink.edu/databases/login/pabs

2. Lexus/Nexus
   Another database that is good for all kinds of information and much like Periodical Abstracts but also has many Newspapers. You should be able to get full text of all articles found in Lexus/Nexus. You can access it by going to one of the terminals at the library or via the internet by typing in:
   http://web.lexis-nexis.com/universe/

3. Sociological Abstracts
   THE source for finding any journal article in sociology.

7. Multi-Purpose WWW Search Engines
   There are several search engines that are designed to help you find things on the www. Below are some examples. Generally, you don't need to use more than one search engine to find what you want, they all pretty much work the same way and search the same things. I personally use AltaVista, but again, this is just a personal choice. Here are the names and links to some good search engines (in alphabetical order):
   - All the Web: http://www.alltheweb.com/
   - AltaVista: http://www.altavista.com/
   - Excite: http://www.excite.com/
   - InfoSeek: http://www.infoseek.com/
   - Lycos: http://www.lycos.com/
   - Northern Light: http://www.northernlight.com/
   - Yahoo: http://www.yahoo.com/

8. Scour.Net
   A search engine designed specifically to find sites containing audio, video, or images on the web. Access it by typing:
9. Newspapers Online
   Several Newspapers have editions online including:
   The Chicago Tribune: http://chicagotribune.com/
   The Los Angeles Times: http://www.latimes.com/
   The St.Louis Post-Dispatch: http://www.stlnet.com/
   USA Today: http://usatoday.com/
